AviAssist joins twitter

Hoofddorp, Netherlands, 20th May, 2011 —

AviAssist has joined the ranks of individuals and businesses on the social networking site Twitter.com. AviAssist will post the latest organisational news, training opportunities and updates on deployments.

“More people are looking to the internet as their first stop for news and opportunities to network with other professionals,” said AviAssist Director Tom Kok. “Twitter is a major source of connecting on the internet with AviAssist, aviation safety professionals, corporations and interested individuals. Twitter provides AviAssist with an additional communications stream that will keep followers informed and connected with the organisation and its work. So far, we have already posted some 260 Tweets.”

“Whereas the number of Twitter followers from the African continent may initially be limited, it will serve another purpose of the Foundation: engaging with the world outside Africa on issues affecting African aviation safety by promoting a better understanding of the operational, social, political and cultural issues that play a role in a continent with many primary needs competing for scarce resources.”

The AviAssist Foundation is an independent, non-profit organization that promotes professionalism in African aviation safety. It provides safety support to African countries and companies. As regional affiliate of the Flight Safety Foundation, it identifies threats to aviation safety, analyzes the problems and works on practical solutions to them. It aims to replicate safety successes from elsewhere on the African continent and beyond. It does so in close coordination with ICAO, stakeholders and safety support providers.
